A MESMERIC EXPERIMENT. IN THE WORLD OF SPORTS

A week later there was a brilliant gather. furtive light that looked very like triumph. ing at the Reeves mansion—the first since Turning to the curious throng, he resumed Valerie's reappearance in society. She had "I shall show you a simple phenomenon, laid aside her widow's weeds; and, to-night, my friends, effected by a mere exercise of in the subued splendor of black and purple, will. Madam herself (if she will permitme) If Farrell Whips Daly, He'll Make a single diamond gleaming in her hair, she shall be so controlled as to-but you shall looked and moved a queen among her see. Be so kind as to meet my eye for a guests. All acknowledged her away-youth | moment, madam, so"and age, the giddy votary of fashion, and the sedate student. Hers was an undisputed reign-an absolute sovereignty.

Among the many who swelled her brilliant train was one of whom she entertained a secret dread, a vague emotion—neither fear nor admiration, yet partaking strangely of both. He fascinated yet repelled her; she shuddered at his touch, yet his glance held her spell-bound. It was the fascinated held her spell-bound. It was the fascination of the serpent, that holds the victim powerless while it strikes. A dark, impenetrable man, Hugh Walraven by name: an adventurer, doubtless, yet countenanced in the best society; a Cagliostro in principle, a Chesterfield in polish; a man of the world—keen, subtle and profound; and, to crown all, an acknowledged measurers. Among the many who swelled her brillgaze. He moved a step backward-another. all, an acknowledged meamerist.

As he, among the rest, approached her. Valerie experienced that intuitive shrink. presenting the page for their inspection. ing, that undefined terror, which prompts the bird to shun the approaching snake; but, like the bird she was powerless against line, letter for letter, they were the very the influence. She met those basilisk eyes, words! full of siumberous fire, baleful yet beautiful, and she succumbed to the spell. He then resumed, with a calm and haughty paid her some trite compliment, nothing in smile, "Allow me to show you a further itself; but the crowd drew back, as when a manifestation. Madam is entirely subser lion staks among hinds. One only, a haughty young noble, unused to having his domains invaded. turned carelessly, and, where I will." Then turning towards the Valerie remained motionless. Walraven shind the material to the spiritual, the visible to the invisible world, may be closer than is supposed by those whose natures are clogged by ignorance and prejudice. The air around us, the boundless space in which we move and breathe, is filled with the flutter of invisible wings, and myrlads upon myrlads from the unknown shores than a superbase of the flutter of invisible wings, and myrlads upon myrlads from the unknown shores than a superbase of the flutter of invisible wings, and myrlads upon myrlads from the unknown shores than a superbase of the flutter of invisible wings, and myrlads upon myrlads from the unknown shores than a superbase of the flutter of invisible wings, and myrlads upon myrlads from the unknown shores than a superbase of the superbase of the flutter of invisible wings, and myrlads upon myrlads from the unknown shores than a superbase of the air around us, the boundless space in which we move and breathe, is filled with the flutter of invisible wings, and myriads upon myriads from the unknown shores share and, perhaps, control our destinies!"

There was something unique in such a speech at such a time and place. All eyes were turned to the speaker, and the buzz of conversation died away.

"Your belief," said Valerie, "if not quite self-evident, is at least fascinating."

"All knowledge, madam," replied Walraven, "is fascinating to reflecting minds. The yearning for the unattainable, for that which is beyond, is implanted in every human soul. Magnetism is the great medium of the universe. Without it all were chaos."

It was with a certain besitancy in her voice that Valerie answered, "You have pursued the study of that science with some pursued the study of that science with some success. I believe.
